INTRODUCTION TO VOLUME 52

Prior to its initial publication in November of 1915, the Cornell Law Quarterly had two ambitious but short-lived forerunners. Both of these publications, the Cornell Law Journal and the New York Law Review, were planned and initiated as monthly journals. Perhaps the task assumed was too great, since the former publication was discontinued after one issue and the latter after six. At any rate, the next attempt at Cornell to establish a law review was more modest; as its name indicates, the Quarterly was designed to be published only four times a year. It has remained and flourished as a quarterly to the present day.

Volume 52, however, will be published in six rather than the traditional four issues. This decision signals a major change in both outlook and operation. It is indicative of a desire to improve the Quarterly's contribution to legal thought in every possible way.

In line with this desire, the approach to student work is also being modified. In volume 52 more emphasis will be placed upon the scope or "topic" note than on the casenote. To reflect this modified approach, a new format for titling notes has been inaugurated; in addition, the Editor who supervised the writing of the note will be indicated with appropriate footnote credit.

By expanding the breadth and depth of student work, the Editors intend to increase the usefulness of the Quarterly as a research tool and as a source for comprehensive analyses of contemporary legal problems. By revamping the publication schedule and printing six issues per year, the Editors intend to facilitate internal operating procedures and insure that the material presented to our readers is as current as possible. It is hoped that these changes will enhance the quality of the review and its value to the legal profession.
